Income Taxation I Prof. Jack Bogdanski Fall 2016 Syllabus

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Code is an ever-evolving beast, changing virtually every year, and occasionally even several times within a single year. A major part of a tax lawyer's life is keeping up with the constant drumbeat of statutory revision.

Fortunately for students and scholars, the current political gridlock in our nation's capital has stabilized things lately, at least somewhat. For example, the Bankman casebook from 2012 (the "Casebook") is still relatively fresh; the few updates that are needed can be handled just fine by a brief handout. By contrast, the Code volume is new every year, because new regulations are always appearing and many Code provisions are tweaked annually, including recurring changes to reflect inflation. Use of older editions of any of the assigned books, or of study aids that are more than, say, four years old, is dangerous.

I doubt that there will be much, if any, significant tax legislation passed during the semester. Anything is possible, however, and if any important changes do occur, I will (of course) keep you posted.

One thing you'll notice when you look at the reading assignments is that we jump around a fair amount in the books. For that reason, it's a good idea to familiarize yourself with the checklist of topics on page 3. We'll be going through the topics in the order listed there.

Course Outline

The course has four major parts, as follows:

The first and largest is the all-important consideration of gross income (Casebook Chapters 1 to 3, Chirelstein Parts A, D, and E).

Second, and also of great significance, are deductions and credits (Casebook Chapters 4 to 6, Chirelstein Part B).

Third comes income splitting, or attribution of income, as it is sometimes known (Casebook Chapter 7, Chirelstein Part C).

The fourth and final part is a brief look at capital gains and losses (Casebook Chapter 8, Chirelstein Part F).

As you can see, the Casebook provides the basic order of the course, although we'll skip around quite a bit in that text. We'll spend by far the most of our time on the first two topics; the last two will be presented in a bit of a whirlwind tour at the end of the course. The assignments from Chirelstein and Zelenak follow the Casebook readings, as a way to help you understand and think about them.

About Your Mission

For each topic listed herein, you are responsible for the assigned textual materials and any and all Internal Revenue Code ("I.R.C.") and Treasury regulation sections discussed in the texts, listed on this syllabus, and/or mentioned in class. If you feel you need an exhaustive list of these Code and regulation sections, it might be a useful exercise for you to make one for yourself as we go along.

Also, remember that the Casebook is a few years old, and so a small portion of it may be out of date. As you tackle each reading assignment in the Casebook, check the free online Summer 2016 Student's Update to be sure you've got the latest information.

A final note of introduction: This is a 4-unit course. The official expectation is that you will spend eight hours a week, outside of class time, studying for this course. That's a full day every week for 13 weeks! Please be responsible and stay caught up. Although the volume of material assigned is by no means light, it shouldn't be too threatening if you're spending sufficient time reading, thinking, and talking about the subject. Above all, don't get discouraged if things seem confusing; with time and effort, most (if not all) of it will make sense in the end.
